Hello and welcome to my portfolio website!

My name is Tom Coysman, and I am a web developer currently living in Berlin, Germany. I started my journey into coding in March of 2020, when I spend some time with the inner html of a page that wasn't properly loading- and found that it was more interesting then anything I had been doing before.

Not long after that coding became a hobby and an addiction. Especially after dipping my toe in Javascript, the aspiration grew to become good at programming- and maybe even to turn this into my profession. Initially it was the design and UI/UX experience that attracted me about coding. By now, however, I find myself equally attracted to the logic, the beauty of (simple) solutions and the ingenuity of a well designed application.

Already at university, where I obtained a Masters degree in History from Ghent University, I felt an imminent need to always learn new things. Therefore I combined my studies with a freelance modeling career- a combination that meant a lot of early mornings and even more early morning studying. Still, learning is what I enjoy most, and therefore I am always looking to improve my skillset and enlarge my stack.

I have a fair grip on Html, CSS and also Javascript is slowly starting to let me in. As you can read in the project section of the page, I am currently learning about Rest API's and Node.js, and plan on learning SQL or MongoDB after that.

If this website raises any questions, incites any comments or constructive criticism, or you feel like working together, please do not hesitate and contact me via email. I would love to hear from you.

All the best,

Tom Coysman
